2016-2017 A. Coordinator for the Development of the Certificate in Human Development: Advanced Research Methods for Developmental and Family Studies

The Certificate in Advanced Research Methods for Developmental and Family Studies will make an incremental but important contribution to Auburn's goal of becoming one of the nation's preeminent land-grant universities. Specifically, students completing the certificate will be better positioned to conduct rigorous and high impact research through education and training in traditional and cutting edge research methods in the social sciences. This program will increase the quality of graduate student training, increase the quality of graduate student applicants, and improve the placement of graduate students in academic institution, research firm, and public service positions. Improved quality of graduate student training in research methods will directly create higher impact research and publication opportunities for both students and faculty, and will indirectly improve Auburn graduate student alumni's placement into research intensive institutions. The HDFS department is nationally recognized as one of the top 5 in the country, and the addition of this program will bring further recognition and attract high caliber graduate students who understand that a strong background in research methodology is key for success in academic, public service, and outreach settings that involved basic or applied research.
